He considered it uncless to discuss the principle of arbitration when it seemed imposathle to bring about an arbitration in the present situation.

The President informed the officials that they were discussing an impractical thing in the present crisis when they mentioned arbitration, for employees would not accept arbitration, and he had no way of forcing them to accept it.

President Wilson declared he was the spokesman for 100,000,000 people, every one of whom had a deep interjust in the present minute to avoid only object, he said, was to avoid in the present situation. His a strike, with its consequent disaste o the nation. MUST FACE NAKED TRUTH IN

"We must face the naked truth it this crists," said the President. "We must not discuss impractical things. We must get down to a basis on which this situation can be solved." It is believed that the railroad Presidents, after additional conferences with the President, to be held dest week, will agree to his sugges-lion, as the representatives of the it was proposed to designate the ordone. In his statement to the public the President states that the railroads will be granted the right to put before the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other body the question creased expenses of eight-hour day operation. It is hard to see how the railroad managers and directors can get around this proposition.

Twenty minutes after President Wilson had formally and unequivocally stamped with his approval the principle of the eight-hour day the railroad presidents came out of the White House. They had been in conference with the President about three-quarters of an hour, and while this conference was in session Hecretary Tumuity released for publication the President's statement.

The railway executives did not understand what President Wilson said to them was an ultimatum, but when they came away from the White Heuse and heard about the statement they realized it was that in effect. The President told them to come back again, at their leisure. He has cancelled all engagements for to-morrow.

The opposition to the President's plans among the railroad magnates is gradually breaking down. Though Louis W. Hill has sept a statement to his representatives to stand nat against the President's proposition there are things happening right now that indicate some of the big roads have already capitulated.
